Q: Disable frontend user registration I am using drupal 7 with the nelmatic cms. How do I disable user registration at the frontend? What I mean is, that I need a form to enter his details (email and password) for a newsletter, but the user should not be able to register for the newsletter. The data the user entered should be sent via the newsletter to the nelmatic admin by email. What I already tried is: in the cms admin: Disable user registration under Node content types, but the user still can register. in the settings.php file, I add `$conf['user_register_form']['register']['register_enabled'] = FALSE;` to disable registration for any user. But the user still registers.

A: If you look at the code of `node_user_register_form()` you will see that this function is called in order to register a normal, signed-in user. So it makes sense that this function returns FALSE if the user is already registered, since doing this wouldn't make much sense. Unfortunately this is not the only function that calls it. In particular `node_cron_register()` will call it too and it seems that that is where your issue lies. So I would start by disabling that one.

Risk factors and morbidity of caesarean section in pregnancy: a case-control study. To identify risk factors for cesarean section in pregnancy. Prospective case-control study. A reference maternity hospital. Cases included women having a primary cesarean section and controls those having a vaginal birth. Case and control groups were frequency-matched for maternal age and type of membrane at delivery. Bivariate analyses were performed using conditional logistic regression. Seventy-four women were included in the study. The mean (SD) age was 28.4 (4.7) years for cases and 28.5 (5.2) years

What's new in Alone With You - Official Soundtrack:

Alone With You: 20 Songs About Loss, Grief & the Road to Healing
Victoria Law, the Director of Alone with You, shares more about the inspiring soundtrack song selections. Hearing the self-produced, self-financed, full-length documentary Alone with You: A Road to Healing, for the first time, I was amazed at the self-healing stories the film shared of people who have survived the devastating effects of life-changing physical disabilities, leaving them alone with their sorrow and grief, hoping against hope for a better life for themselves and their families. The many sounds of the movie - of their pain, of their family life, of their hopes - came to life for me through the songs that played over the stories. The first time I heard Alone with You, it was from my car - as one of my couple friends and I were driving together to dinner - a few months after the film had just opened in theatres. As the critics came out in waves to give away their copy, the parking lot at the iPic Uptown cinema soon filled up. We were the only people there. With the overtime pay for the cinemas, I imagine there was enough money behind the scenes to serve out hundreds of free copies to the movie's aggressive audience. [The place we were at was usually full, but quite a few seats still opened up, no doubt due to the film's critical acclaim and such. When we finally went in, we saw that the film had just about taken the house.] As the lights went down at the end of the first act, the audience began to applaud, just a bit, and I thought: this film is quite brilliant, after all. As the applause kept building up, I turned to my companion and said: This is such a powerful film. At the time, my friend had moved to Chicago to start up a new life working in a creative field. While the applause was just beginning, he looked at me and said: Hey, this sounded like it could be a movie. How do I put this into a movie? And with that thought, the seed of this film was planted. I was on my way to New York to study English Literature at the CUNY Graduate Center. When I arrived in Manhattan, the film gave me an idea for my thesis project. Watching Alone with You, I thought about how a film can connect
