Here are five key areas FIFA 22 introduces HyperMotion technology to improve the overall football experience. Off-ball movement Motion capture data is a key part of all 22 playable player models. Off-ball movement has been enhanced to mimic real-world football, with the data-driven physics engine transforming players on the pitch into authentic, and unpredictable, footballers. Players will also react dynamically to and off the ball - for example, if an on-ball passing situation does not work out, players may run for alternative options, or head for open space. Dynamic AI behavior Individual player reactions will be conditioned by the context they find themselves in. Players take their cues from opponents, whether out on the pitch or in the crowd, and react by picking their next actions in line with their opponent's movements. For example, teams will prioritize making hard tackles against strikers because they are easier to beat, and players will also demonstrate more caution before shooting a long range free kick or a penalty because they are less likely to score. New tactical voting system The All-Stars squad has the most attractive, balanced and exciting of any game FIFA has produced to date - you decide how to assemble your team through tactical voting, with the key vote in the second round of voting encouraging you to choose the team where everyone has a role in the team's build-up play. New integrated squad editor The community-driven squad editor brings a host of new team-building features. Create your squads with custom formations, shape and tactics; change your tactics in one-off situations or entire matches; see your players' actions clearly in the viewer, and much more! Live Online Completeness Football fans around the world can now compete with friends and rivals on FIFA Online 4 and EA Sports FIFA Ultimate Team together for the first time ever, and enjoy a competitive journey through the match. Recommended for You Rated 1 out of 5 by havz from Silly and boring! I'm not going to lie, this is a really good game. The graphics are good and the gameplay is good. The gameplay mechanics are fair, but the game's pretty slow and it's hard to pass. Its hard to set up your shots (crosses and back posts) and it takes a while to get a decent pass, but its what I expected from a Fifa game, but I was hoping for a better game.
