In the original Alien film, when the astronaut character gets inside the Alien craft, he finds himself inside a hexagon-shaped chest, inside which he finds the body of the Alien crewmember. When he opens the chest, the Alien body starts moving and it gets knocked off the hexagon and falls several feet. Then it lands on the floor and a couple of seconds later, is burned by the flare. Why does the Alien body drop from the hexagon so quickly? Surely, the chest would be heavy enough to resist the Alien's movement. A: When an alien is knocked out, it doesn't move very fast, not even a dinosaur in I Am Legend. However, if we add water into this chest, the Alien's movements will be sped up. Image from here.
