I am the administrator for a group of computers and like to be able to communicate with other people in that group. Do you have any suggestions, experiences, or information on how to do this? A: While a web browser is always going to be the most widely used way to communicate via the Internet, it would also serve your purposes if the two communicating systems can access each other's file system, either directly or via a shared folder on a third system. There is a lot of information on both the technical side and also on the human side of this process. Wikipedia has pages on Remote File Access, Remote Desktop, Remote FTP and Network File Sharing. One of the first parts of the process is usually running the appropriate server software on each system. The next part is for the users to allow certain people to access b7e8df5c8
